Not illustrated. 1847 Excerpt: ...and the light of his heart was flown-- and then again the lips of Juan would close, and he would seem easier for a moment after muttering these broken and incoherent sentences. The young girl leaned over his pale face, and through her tapering fingers the hot tears trickled and dropped upon his brow. The fountain--no, tis the dew, let us go home, dear cousin, but first let me tell you that I love you--but your father--hark, she sings again! Oh, that is no spirits voice. Ive heard it before, it used to sing me to sleep when I was a babe--ah me, when I was a baby, almost twenty years ago-- and then again the sufferer was still. While Elizabetta listened to the words of the unconscious speaker, many a strange change came over her countenance. Now of sadness, then of wonder; now of pain and then apparently of pleasure. Dear lady: said she to Luella, please see if you can espy the surgeon coming on the river-road, from the watch-tower, and I will watch your cousin till you return!, The young lady left the apartment, and as her graceful figure passed from the view of the duenna, who had gazed upon her with evident admiration, the latter thus soliloquized: She is beautiful! yes, as beautiful as a fond parent could desire, more beautiful I am sure, than would have been the governors daughter had it lived--and,--well, well aday, but this is a strange world! They both love each other and they think they are cousins. In the first I am satisfied; in the second they are deceived. The governor thinks her his daughter; in that, he is deceived, and I am satisfied; the boy thinks that Don Enrico is his uncle; in which he is deceived as well as the rest. So deception is the order of the day with all but me, and I cannot, Roberto is returning and one whom I think is...
