Not illustrated. 1798 Excerpt: ... Queerij also, depending on the good faith of his MostChristian Majestys intentions, has taken certain steps, which are beyond the ordinary rules of negociations, and which you know well, without its being necessary for me to remind you of them. Mr. Prior will explain viv& voce, her Majestys declarations to the States-General, respecting the interests of the Elector of Bavaria, and her Majesty hopes the King will, in that, discern her wites to please him in every thing that depends upon her. I must, however, fay, Sir, that we cannot see how the pretensions of that Prince came to be interwoven with the cession of Tournay. When the question was to give Sicily to the Duke of Savoy, you said that kingdom was intended, by the King of Spain, for the Elector of Bavaria, who, consequently, ought to be recompensed, this recompence was even specified, and Sardinia was demanded: but at present the case is widely different, and you will own Tournay would not be given to the Elector, if the Dutch were forced to give it up. The cession of Sicily being granted, and the Duke of Savoys right to the Crown of Spain being substituted after King Philip and his children, we can no lorurer doubt this Prince will enter into all the measures necessary to procure a peace. The Queen reckons upon this, and indeed his Royal Highness is too well informed, to wish to give up such real and substantial advantages as we propose for him, and to amuse himself with the wild schemes of the Court of Vienna. The article of the barrier on the side of France, appeared to be the stumbling-block. You know, Sir, how inflexible you were upon it, and I can assure you, the Ministers of Savoy have always spoken of it as essential to their masters interest, and without which he could not have that sec...
