Excerpt from The Works of Jonathan Swift, D.D, Vol. 7: Dean of St. Patricks, Dublin; Containing Additional Letters, Tracts, and Poems, Not Hitherto Published; With Notes and a Life of the Author

The former of the two following papers is dated October 6th, 1724, by which it appears to be written a little after the proclamation against the author of the Drapiers Fourth Letter. It is delivered with much caution, because the author confesses himself to be Dean of St Patricks, and I could discover his name subscribed at the end of the original, although blotted out by some other hand. I can tell no other reason why it was not printed, than what I have heard, that the writer, finding how effectually the Drapier had succeeded, and at the same time how highly the people in power seemed to be displeased, thought it more prudent to keep it in his cabinet. However, having received some encouragement to collect into one volume all the papers relating to Ireland, supposed to be written by the Drapier, and knowing how favourably the authors writings of that kind have been received by the public, to make the volume more complete, I procured a copy of the following letter from one of the authors friends, with whom it was left while the author was in England; and I have printed it as near as I could in the order of time. The next treatise is called An Address, &c. It is without a date; but seems to be written during the first session of Parliament in Lord Carterets government. The title of this Address is in the usual form, by M. B. Drapier. There is but a small part of it that relates to William Wood and his coin.
